“ My beautiful wife was truly my soulmate and the best friend I ever had. We were High School sweethearts, and I knew on our very first date back in 1990, that one day she would be my wife. She was absolutely brilliant...the smartest person in a room full of scholars. She had a smile and laugh so contagious, you left her company immediately in a better mood. She was the most caring mother any child could wish for. All these beautiful qualities, and she loved me...I was so fortunate to be married to this amazing woman. She was loved and respected by everyone she dealt with on a daily basis. If I had a minute extra with her for each time someone told me they loved her, I would have her for many more years. The loss of my wife has taught me so much about myself and the bond we shared. My soul has been irreparably damaged, and it won't be completely healed until we meet again on the high side. She may have left this world of ours, but she will always be a part of me, and I will look for her wherever I go.
