“ My daughter, Roxane, and I send out deepest condolences to Shirley’s family, especially her daughter, Dale, and son, Ken, who I remember as babies. Shirley was my best friend. We met in 1944 during our first year at Moore College of Art in Philadelphia. We were both day students. I think Shirley met her husband during the early days there, and while my parents said that if I got married they wouldn’t support me anymore, Shirley’s father wanted her to finish her studies and offered to pay. But Shirley just wanted to get married. We stayed friends since that time. We travelled together all around the world, Alaska, Australia, Europe, Tahiti, South West United States. We went to Tahiti because I wanted to go see where Gauguin painted, but unfortunately Shirley got sick with food poisoning, if I remember correctly. In more recent times I enjoyed our phone calls, especially when my daughter was visiting. We could speak for nearly an hour. There will be a void in my life now, although I will remember our times together with warmth and fondness. I have many photos of Shirley and me from our travels and with our families, which I will try to find and post here. Jessie Lightfoot Permar
